

Salary & Expenses

MEPs get paid too much.

The allowances and expenses are too high.

The transparency and accountability mechanisms are pathetic.

Sinn Féin MEPs consistently vote to reduce salaries, allowances & expenses. We advocate, and vote in favour of, greater transparency and accountability of all payments received by MEPs.

Salary

The salary paid to MEPs works out at circa €1,200 net per week -this is the same for all MEPs. I draw down €615 to my personal account. From the balance I contribute €2,500 annually to Sinn Féin, the maximum allowable under SIPO rules. The remainder is put towards my personal political activity and constituency costs not covered or allowable by EP expenses as well as charitable donations. Some will go towards my future election campaigns. This is my personal choice because I think the salary is too high.

Our record in support of a reduction in salaries and expenses and our support for increased accountability is well known at EU level and is often praised by transparency activists. The role of Fine Gael in blocking these moves is also widely known, at EU level. They're not widely known at Irish level, because for some reason the Irish media don't see a story in it.

General Expenditure Allowance

The General Expenditure Allowance (GEA) is a payment received to cover office running costs and other constituency related activity. It is correctly considered the most controversial of allowances paid to MEPs - currently €4,513 per month.

The main problem is that it is completely un-vouched and there is no accountability mechanism.

For my part the GEA is paid into a separate bank account to which I and a member of my staff are signatories. All expenditure is receipted and in line with the guidelines and best practise laid down by parliament. The bulk of expenditure relates to the running and equipment costs of my constituency office in Carrickmacross. It is also used to pay for things such as public events I organise, printing costs, subscription to academic & news journals and website hosting.

Sinn Féin have, unlike other Irish parties, continuously voted in favour of greater transparency in relation to all aspects of MEPs' expenses and the receipt of public funds by elected representatives.

On every occasion that the matter has come before parliament we have voted in favour of greater transparency of the General Expenditure Allowance.

Sinn Féin's position is that this payment should be fully vouched and receipted and claimed retrospectively.

The European Parliament, is currently devising a mechanism whereby MEPs can voluntarily vouch and account for all expenditure - when that system is in place Sinn Féin will partake in it. Why only a voluntary scheme? Because MEPs from the largest political groups (those groups of which Fine Gael, Labour and Fianna Fáil are members) have resisted even the most minimal levels of mandatory accountability.

In fact, even when a majority of MEPs backed nominal improvements the Bureau of the European Parliament, that's a core group of the parliament president, the 14 Vice-Presidents (Yes, there are 14 Vice-presidents!) and 5 quaestors, rejected the proposals in spite of the majority plenary vote.

This is where Fine Gael have played a role in blocking transparency and accountability.

Have a read of this, for example: <https://euobserver.com/institutional/142274>

It seems amazing to me that, while a number of Irish newspapers have covered stories relating to the General Expenditure Allowance, not one has ever mentioned the role of Fine Gael in this regard.

Staff

I directly employ six people, three based in Brussels, three based in my constituency office. None are in any way related to me. Their salaries are paid by the European Parliament.

Expenses

The largest element of expenses relating to MEPs that are often detailed in media reports are air-travel costs (an unavoidable expense considering we live on an island). For info, the cost of travel tickets is paid directly by the Parliament, via a travel agency commissioned by parliament, to airlines so as such we are not 'refunded' as is often described as the monies don't come to us at any stage.

Expenses that are paid directly to MEPs include a daily subsistence allowance which is paid for each day that a MEP attends the parliament to cover costs of accommodation and other expenses while in Brussels or Strasbourg. Our position is that this payment should be only paid on production of receipts. The other expenses relate to travel costs within the constituency and are paid on the basis of the distances travelled within the constituency in the course of our work as MEPs.

The following expenses have been paid directed to me over the course of this EP term:

2014 (pt year):

Daily Subsistence allowance:	€16,720
Constituency travel:	€8,674

2015:

Daily Subsistence allowance:	€34,578
Constituency travel:	€13,570

2016:

Daily Subsistence allowance:	€33,201
Constituency travel:	€11,478

2017:

Daily Subsistence allowance:	€39,910
Constituency travel:	€10,253

2018:

Daily Subsistence allowance:	€38,655
Constituency travel:	€18,438

MEPs are also allowed to claim expenses to cover the costs of language courses and IT training. I have never claimed for these.
